- 1 To answer the questions, I'm joined today by two experts: Dr Ramona Carter, a leading neuroscientist, and Amanda Saraha, a life coach and the author of How to be smarter.
2 So for example, if you do a lot of Sudoku, the maths puzzle where you write the numbers in boxes, it's most likely that you will just become better at playing that game.
3 Recently, we've seen a lot of media stories about super foods, food that you should eat to boost your brain power.

Do focus on the image you want to convey about yourself;
Don't pretend to be something you're not.
Do justify your choice; Don't say obvious answers like 'T-Rex'.
Do describe a weakness you've overcome; Don't claim to have no weaknesses.
Do think beyond the obvious applications and explore the properties of the object; Don't say 'a paperweight'.
Do work out a plan; Don't say any old number that pops into your head.
Do remind the interviewer that you're a real person; Don't forget to bring your story back to how you're suitable for the job.
Do say you don't have enemies, talk about weaknesses that are strengths and show you can see yourself through others' eyes; Don't leave it as 'I don't have enemies'.

D

Suggested answers

- Yes. The interview is for a job as a marketing designer, so they are likely to be looking for someone creative rather than practical/sensible.
- Yes. He avoided the obvious answer and justified his choice.
- Yes. He described a past weakness and how he overcame it.
- Yes and no. The 'paperweight' answer was too obvious, but the other three answers were more creative.
- Yes (mostly). He made fair estimates and worked through a logical process. His answer was right on the edge of the target 'ballpark figures', but this is probably OK.
- Yes and no. He described something real and personal. He implied that he has skills that could be useful in business (i.e. coping with difficulty, leadership skills). However, he didn't explicitly show how his experiences are relevant to the job, which is a missed opportunity.
- Yes. He answered this question well.

- 1 The writer is quite sceptical about these treatments. Some examples:

Introduction: '... we've noticed that some therapies doing the rounds at hotel spas right now sound suspiciously basic.' (Here she uses the adverb suspiciously to show scepticism; also doing the rounds is a colloquial phrase that reinforces her sceptical attitude.)

Introduction: 'Surely oxygen therapy is just breathing, right?' (Here she uses a rhetorical question to comment on the topic, showing she is sceptical of the value of this treatment.)

Paragraph 3: 'The practice is supposed to exercise the mind as well as reduce stress by bringing you back to nature.' (Here she uses the structure supposed to to show scepticism about the effects.)

Paragraph 4: 'Does lying fully clothed on a bed while wrapped in a bag of carbon dioxide sound fun? Didn't think so, but in the Czech Republic it's all the rage.' (Here she uses some colloquial asides and humour to show a sceptical attitude to this treatment.)

The use of asides, e.g. you know, well, that's right, perhaps; ironic phrases in quotes, e.g. plant hydrosol ionising mist, stimulating breeze; choice of vocabulary, e.g. plant-derived lactic acids and exfoliators; contrasts, e.g. peat enzymes and berries; choice of adverbs, e.g. supposedly boost and structures, e.g. is meant to, all combine to show the writer's sceptical attitude in an entertaining style.

Ideas for dealing with the problem

Limiting the number of visitors (capping admittance, using timed tickets, increasing prices), charging a tourism tax, using an app to tell tourists which places are busy.

Criticism of these ideas

Increased prices are elitist, the tourism tax is unfair, limiting the number of visitors is too extreme.

VOCABULARY HUB

A

- 1 dress code 2 setter 3 costume 4 scruffy
5 stand out from 6 baggy

B

Suggested answers

- 1 A dress code tells people more or less what to wear (e.g. suits and ties, blouses and skirts), while a uniform requires everyone to wear exactly the same clothes.
2 A trend can be set in fashion, music, etc; after it has started, other people follow it.
3 An outfit and a costume both describe a complete set of clothes that someone wears together. A costume is for somebody who is pretending to be someone else (e.g. an actor) or a traditional set of clothes for a particular place/time. An outfit is a set of clothes worn for a particular occasion.

- 4 Scruffy clothes and casual clothes both contrast with smart clothes. Scruffy clothes may be dirty or damaged; casual clothes are comfortable clothes, typically in a good condition.
5 If you stand out from the crowd, you look different from everyone else; if you fit in, you look the same as (or similar to) everyone else. Both phrasal verbs describe how people's clothes may reflect their personalities.
6 Baggy and oversized both describe clothes that are very loose. Oversized clothes are too big for you; baggy clothes may be the right size for you, but deliberately designed to be loose-fitting.
